Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

1. Claims 1 vs 2 appear to be substantial duplicates since for each set of claims the only difference is the added X-ray data. The X-ray data is an inherent characteristic and thus would not fail to distinguish (i.e. further limit) the claim(s) reciting the X-ray data. Thus it is not seen how infringing one of the pair would not infringe the remaining claim.

2. Throughout the claims mention is made of “a crystal” which literally recites a single particle. Perhaps crystal form was really intended? See claims 1,2 and 6.

3. In claim 3 “spontaneous nucleus” is not an art-recognized term. It appears from a discussion of the invention in the specification that the intended term is “spontaneous nucleation” which is art-recognized.

The disclosure is objected to because of the following informalities: Terms such as “nucleus” appear inappropriate. “Nucleation” appears to be the intended term. Applicants are requested to check for additional terms that may be the result of a translation error.

Appropriate correction is required.

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claim 6 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Kakemi, cited in applicants' International Search Report. While a copy has been provided in the original Japanese language, the examiner has obtained an English translation which is provided herewith. As acknowledged by applicants in the specification forms I-III of free base of instant compound is produced in Kakemi by dissolution in acetonitrile of the free base identified herein as A. However applicants also state that the polymorphic form III is NOT directly obtained from form A but rather from the acetonitrile solvate of A based on their isolation of the solvate and characterization data. However given that Kakemi employs acetonitrile to ultimately crystallize final products out of solution (see p.7), it would be reasonable for one of ordinary skill in the art to infer that standard isolation procedures were followed which include drying of the product by heating and/or under reduced pressure. Applicants rely on conventional procedure for the desolvation step (see specification p.7) which would include the same procedure used in routine isolation of precipitates. Note Integra Life Sciences v. Merck 50 USPQ2d 1846.

US'049 is being cited as it is the equivalent to JP'680 cited by the JP examiner.
